WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- North winds will develop again over Northern California starting Wednesday and that will once again bring an increase in fire weather danger.
- Critical Fire Weather conditions will be possible Thursday night through Saturday morning across the mountains of Los Angeles and Ventura counties, as well as the Santa Barbara County mountains and south coast. These areas are under a Fire Weather Watch during this time due to the potential for north winds gusting between 30 and 45 mph, coupled with very dry conditions (humidities lowering to between 5 and 15 percent) and very dry fuels. If fire ignition occurs, there will be the potential for rapid fire spread and extreme fire behavior, which would lead to a threat to life and property.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 "High Risk" conditions for a more standard N to NE wind event and low Relative Humidity (RH) today through Sunday morning for portions of Northern California

 Very dry air mass will linger over much of the Geographic Area through early next week ***

A couple low pressure troughs will swing over the region starting today and last into the weekend. Periods of strong N to NE winds will develop and be accompanied with low humidity and near seasonable temperatures. "High Risk" for Significant Fire Potential has been designated for the Sacramento Valley/Foothills (NC05) PSA today through Sunday morning due to moderately strong N to NE wind and low RH. Additional PSA's have been added for today and Thursday as well as Saturday. The "High Risk" area includes the Mid Coast and Mendocino (NC02), particularly favoring Lake and Napa counties as well as the Diablo Range (NC03B) of the Bay Area. Peak gusts between 30 to 40 mph are possible in wind prone areas. The strongest winds should favor the tonight and Saturday to Saturday night period. It should be mentioned that the upcoming multi-day wind event will not be as strong, both in terms of areal coverage as well as wind speeds, compared to the previous Sunday/Monday event. Some modest humidity increases will initially occur near to the coast as well as across the far north but humidity values overall will be low with single digits during the day periods and poor recoveries at night.

A very dry airmass is still expected to impact much of the area Sunday through early next week and be accompanied with warmer than normal temperatures. Wind speeds however, are expected to lower.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

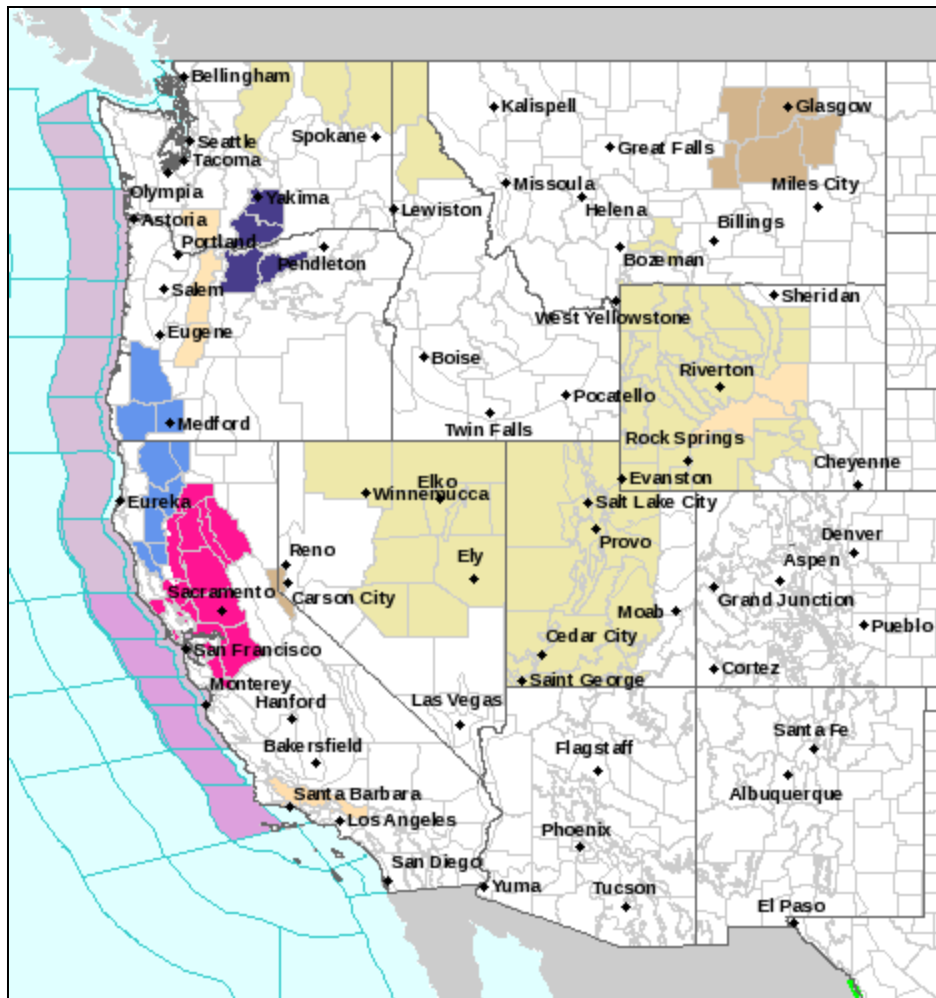

North winds possible Thursday night through Friday night

Offshore winds and warmer temperatures this weekend

The cooling trend that began yesterday will continue through Thursday as temperatures trend downward 2-4 degrees each day. By Thursday, highs will be in the 60s along the coast to the 70s in the valleys. Local west to northwest winds of 10-20 mph will be possible this afternoon along the central coast and in the southern Owens Valley into the central Mojave. RH should be higher this afternoon over most areas. A trough heading into the Great Basin will generate another windy period beginning Thursday night which will last through next Sunday night or Monday. Thursday night, local north winds of 15-30 mph will be possible across Santa Barbara County, the I-5 Corridor and the Kern County Mountains. Local RH may fall into the 20-30% by early Friday morning with these areas seeing very low RH by the afternoon. Similar windspeeds will be possible Friday night. This weekend, the flow will transition to a northeast, offshore orientation which will cause the windy areas to shift into Ventura County, the Santa Clarita Valley, the Santa Ana Canyon and other areas which typically see windy weather during offshore flow. The winds in these areas will increase Saturday, likely peaking in strength Saturday night into Sunday. In general, winds during the weekend look far weaker than those that occurred Monday. The windiest areas will see velocities in the 15-30 mph with locally higher gusts possible Sunday morning. Temperatures over coastal and valley areas will climb back toward the 90 degree mark Saturday and Sunday across Southern California. Cooler, onshore flow will quickly return by Tuesday as a wetter system takes aim at the Pacific Northwest and the far northern part of California.
